European Commission's Initiative to Strengthen Whistleblower Protection

Authors: Thomas Griebe, Shareholder & Matthias Pallentin, Associate — vangard, Littler Germany

Whistleblowers: some consider them traitors; others see them as modern heroes. At present, protections for whistleblowers still differ greatly among the 28 member states. Only 10 member states have comprehensive regulations in this area, while other countries offer isolated safeguards or none at all. In a recent proposal, the EU Commission seeks to improve (minimum) protections for whistleblowers and, above all, ensure these protections are uniform throughout Europe.

Company Liable for Contract Worker's Injuries

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Naomi Seddon, Shareholder & Merille Raagas, Counsel — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

On September 6, 2018, the NSW Supreme Court held that a company (Company A) that used a contracted labor hire worker was responsible for the worker's injuries and not the worker's direct employer (Company B), finding that Company A was negligent and that Company B did not have the requisite knowledge or reason to suspect the risk of harm to the worker. Employers using on-demand labor should still ensure the safety of all labor hire workers and contractors in the same manner as their employees, as liability can flow regardless of the employment relationship.

Federal Court Rules Casual Employees May Be Entitled to Annual Leave

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Naomi Seddon, Shareholder & Merille Raagas, Counsel — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

On August 24, 2018, the Federal Court confirmed on appeal that, in certain circumstances, casual employees may be entitled to annual leave under s86 of the Fair Work Act. Based on the common law multi-factor test, the Court considered the prevailing nature of the employment, the employer's right to control the work, how the employee is being paid, and hours of work, among other factors. Due to the continuing and indefinite nature of his work, in addition to an agreed pattern and arrangement of work, the employee could not be "casual" and was entitled to annual leave despite his contractual status as a "casual employee."

FWC Considers Boundary Between Work and Personal Relationships in Bullying Claim

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Naomi Seddon, Shareholder & Merille Raagas, Counsel — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

On September 11, 2018, the Fair Work Commission denied an application for an order to stop bullying in a case where Employee A had made various comments about Employee B, including questioning the latter's sick leave, work performance and boyfriend's fidelity. As the employees had been friends and regularly socialized outside of work, the FWC found their relationship had gone beyond a typical professional working relationship. Whilst a blurred relationship does not excuse inappropriate workplace conduct, here, the behavior was not unreasonable or repeated.

Employers Can Reject Medical Certificates in Certain Circumstances

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Naomi Seddon, Shareholder & Merille Raagas, Counsel — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

The Fair Work Commission recently held that employers may reject employee medical certificates in situations where the contents are vague. Here, the employee had failed to provide a medical certificate detailing the nature of duties he was not fit to perform; why employee was now fit to resume work when previously he was unfit; the necessary length of time for any modified working arrangements; or a date by which employee could resume his normal duties. The right to reject a medical certificate is likely limited to situations where the employee has been off work for an extended period of time and/or is seeking work restrictions upon their return.

Labor Seeks Changes for Gig Workers

Proposed Bill or Initiative

Authors: Naomi Seddon, Shareholder & Merille Raagas, Counsel — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

On September 20, 2018, the Federal Labor party released its proposal for changes to the Fair Work Act. If elected, Labor promises to introduce changes so gig workers are protected in the same manner as employees. Currently companies who rely on gig workers pay a rate per delivery, but under the proposed changes we could see mandatory hourly rates being implemented of up to AUD 23.66 (AUD18.93 per hour + 25% loading) and see the loss of much of the flexibility and freedom that is currently enjoyed by companies and workers in the industries that rely heavily on independent contractors and on-demand workers.

New Legislation Enacted

Author: Edward Carlier, Partner — Reliance Lawyers

Belgian Law of July 30, 2018, implements EU Directive of June 8, 2016, on the protection of undisclosed know-how and business information (trade secrets) against their unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure. The law allows trade secret holders to apply for specific measures, procedures, and remedies to prevent, or obtain redress for, the unlawful acquisition, use or disclosure of their trade secrets. Neither the Directive nor the law are intended to limit the use of non-competes nor limit employees' use of experience and skills honestly acquired in the normal course of their employment.

Bonus May Be Subject to Being Employed at Time of Payment, Court Rules

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Edward Carlier, Partner — Reliance Lawyers

The Brussels Labour Court recently dismissed the claim of a former employee to receive a bonus. The bonus plan, in addition to setting minimum thresholds for performance and length of service, ruled out entitlement to a bonus in case of end of service prior to the date of payment of the bonus. Such a condition was considered valid by the Labour Court. This decision again confirms the importance of adequate wording in bonus plans. Said condition may, however, not be enforceable in situations where payment of a bonus is artificially delayed.

Draft Bill to Increase Minimum Age for Favorable Unemployment Scheme

Proposed Bill or Initiative

Author: Edward Carlier, Partner — Reliance Lawyers

Elder employees that are being made redundant can step into a favorable unemployment scheme, provided they meet some specific conditions in terms of length of career and minimum age. The scheme provides for monthly state-paid unemployment benefits and a monthly additional payment by the ex-employer, until the legal retirement age. A draft bill, if enacted, will increase the minimum age from 56 to 60 for employees being made redundant by companies in economic difficulties or in restructuring, with intended effect as of January 1, 2019.

Brazil's New Data Privacy Law

New Legislation Enacted

Author: Renata Neeser, Shareholder — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

On August 14, 2018, Brazil enacted its first omnibus data protection law, to become effective in February 2020. The new law amends the Brazilian Civil Rights Framework for the internet and is similar to the EU's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR). Under this law, American companies with operations in Brazil must implement standard contractual clauses or binding corporate rules, or obtain individual consent to transfer personal data from Brazil to their U.S. HQs, as the U.S. is not deemed as offering an "adequate" level of protection, and there is no Privacy Shield Framework between the two countries. Fines for noncompliance may be up to approximately $11 million.

Brazilian Supreme Court Ends Outsourcing Limitations

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Renata Neeser, Shareholder — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

Brazil's Supreme Court recently ruled that companies may outsource any of their activities, including core business activities. The long-lived dispute stemmed from the labor courts declaring, without any legislative support, that it was illegal to outsource core business and from the continuous expansion of what constituted core business. Although last year's labor law reform allows companies to outsource any activities prospectively, it did not resolve the dispute. With the Supreme Court's ruling, more than 4,000 pending cases where the labor courts ruled that outsourcing was illegal will now be reversed.

Although the recreational use of marijuana will be legal in Canada effective October 17, 2018, employees will not have the absolute right to use marijuana in the workplace. However, employers may establish an objective standard for marijuana "impairment" in their workplace policies using the blood drug concentration limits.

Ontario Court of Appeal: Guidelines on Enforceability of Termination Clauses

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Monty Verlint, Partner & Rhonda Levy, Knowledge Management Counsel — Littler LLP

In June 2018, the Ontario Court of Appeal confirmed that (a) where a termination clause can reasonably be interpreted in more than one way, the interpretation that favors the employee should be preferred; (b) where an employment contract is prepared by the employer on a more or less "take it or leave it" basis, and there is a genuine ambiguity, the more favorable interpretation should be given to the employee; and (c) the question of whether there is an ambiguity is to be determined by an objective evaluation of whether there are two or more reasonable interpretations.

Trend

Author: Marco Esteban Arias, Senior Associate — BDS Asesores, Littler Global Costa Rica

As of September 10, 2018, several of the largest unions in Costa Rica have been in an indefinite strike, with no end in sight. The strike has impacted many public services, such as postal service, social security administration (including hospitals and clinics), public education, and many other government services. The strike is against a recent legislative bill to introduce the Valued-Added Tax (VAT), limit some benefits for the public sector, and create new taxes. Currently, a court has declared all but one of the strikes to be illegal. If the illegality is upheld in appeal, employees who remain on strike will have 24 hours to resume labor or face termination.

New Legislation Enacted

Author: Marcela Trujillo, Associate — Godoy Córdoba, Littler Global Colombia

On August 3, 2018, Congress enacted Law 1935-2018, to regulate the nature and destination of tips that employees receive from clients for rendering services. Under the law, tips are not considered salary because they do not remunerate for work. Rather, a tip is a client's voluntary payment to recognize the quality of the service received and only the employee who renders the service is entitled to receive it. The law allows employees to agree with the employer on how tips will be distributed.

Constitutional Court's New Interpretation of Employment Stability for Pregnant and Breastfeeding Employees

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Marcela Trujillo, Associate — Godoy Córdoba, Littler Global Colombia

Under Colombia labor law, employees who are pregnant or breastfeeding cannot be terminated unilaterally without just cause, and the employer must obtain prior authorization from the Ministry of Labor before the termination. However, the Constitutional Court recently ruled in case No. SU-075 that if the employer is not aware of the pregnancy, the termination of the employment contract will not be presumed discriminatory, and the employer will not be required to pay social security contributions and other labor obligations as when discrimination against a pregnant or breastfeeding employee was the cause for termination.

Act on Protecting Trade Secrets

New Legislation Enacted

Author: Tina Reissmann, Partner — Labora Legal

The new Act on Protecting Trade Secrets is based on an EU-directive, which aims to streamline and strengthen the effort on trade secrets within the EU. Key aspects of the law include: (1) oral secrets can be protected; (2) uncertainty over protection of technical drawings; (3) a six-month time-limit to submit a case to the courts; and (4) uncertainty over applications to obtain a temporary prohibition. The bill underlines the necessity of companies to have a strategy regarding company secrets, especially with the new six-month time-limit for filing claims with the courts.

Secret Recording of Conversation with Employer Sufficient for Summarily Dismissal

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Tina Reissmann, Partner — Labora Legal

The Danish High Court of Eastern Denmark recently held that it was a serious violation of the employment relationship when an employee recorded a conversation with his employer. Here, an employee was terminated after throwing a computer mouse at the company's CEO during a conversation about salary. Afterwards, the company learned that the employee had recorded the conversation. The Court found that the events at the meeting were not sufficient to summarily dismiss the employee, but the secret recording of the meeting was.

Summarily Dismissal Due to Social Media Post Not Justified

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Tina Reissmann, Partner — Labora Legal

An employee posted on his private social media account on the way home from vacation: "I have bought 3 cartons of cigarettes. Need one, who is on duty, to take two of those through customs." Of his 300 social media friends, 100 were co-workers at the same employer. Finding that it was not posted in a "closed group", the High Court found the post was a clear violation of the company's policies on behavior on social media, regardless of whether he was violating customs law. Still, the behavior did not qualify as grounds for a summary dismissal, so he could be terminated with the ordinary notice period.

Proposal to Amend Act on Stock Options

Proposed Bill or Initiative

Author: Tina Reissmann, Partner — Labora Legal

The Ministry of Employment has proposed amending the Act on Stock Options. Currently, an employee considered as "good leaver" (terminated due to employer's circumstances) will be entitled to keep his/her stock options rights and receive a proportional "allocation" as though the employee had been employed at the end of the fiscal year. If the bill is passed, such agreements will be annulled when the termination is due to the employer's circumstances and the parties may agree for the employer to buy back stocks. The aim of the bill is to increase flexibility and simplification of these incentive schemes.

#MeToo Legislation Sent to Hearing

Proposed Bill or Initiative

Author: Tina Reissmann, Partner — Labora Legal

Due to the global #MeToo movement, the Ministry of Employment sent a bill to hearing to increase sanctions on breaches to the Act on Equal Treatment to show that the Government regards sexual harassment in the workplace as serious. In an apparent attempt to reject Danish courts' previous rulings, the final note in the bill reads that "It should not be of importance, in the consideration of whether sexual harassment occurred or not, if there were a relaxed work tone or casual work-environment. This is not the employee's choice, whether or not this is the case."

Five-Month Delay Does Not Preclude Application of EU 'Acquired Rights Directive'

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Dónall Breen, Associate — GQ Employment Law LLP, Littler Global United Kingdom

On August 7, 2018, the European Court of Justice ruled that a five-month gap between a music school closing and subsequently opening under new ownership did not preclude application of the Acquired Rights Directive (ARD). The ARD automatically transfers employees from one employer to another when there is a relevant transfer of undertaking. The court ruled that the fact that an undertaking is temporarily closed at the time of the transfer and has no employees may be a relevant factor when assessing if there has been a relevant transfer, but it is not determinative. On these facts, three of the five months were school holidays. Further, because this was an "asset reliant" case (the school and instruments constituted the key 'undertaking' being transferred), the fact that the new owners did not take on the old employees did not preclude the existence of a transfer within the meaning of the ARD.

ECJ Rules on What "Undertaking Controlling the Employer" Means for Collective Redundancy Purposes

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Mark Callaghan, Associate — GQ Employment Law LLP, Littler Global United Kingdom

Employers who make collective redundancies are under an obligation to inform, consult, and notify affected employees by virtue of European Directive 98/59, whether the decision to make such redundancies was taken by the employer, or by an undertaking controlling the employer. On August 7, 2018, the Court of Justice of the European Union held that a "controlling undertaking" can be one that controls the employer as a matter of fact, even if they do not exert legal control. For example, it might suffice if the undertaking can exercise genuine influence in terms of voting, despite not holding a majority of votes (perhaps due to low participation by members in meetings). However, a third party that contracts with the employer and terminates that contract, resulting in collective redundancies, would not be considered a controlling undertaking.

Proposed Bill or Initiative

Author: Maria Wesander, Counsel — Dottir Attorneys Ltd

A government proposal (HE 97/2018) to amend the Act on the Protection of Privacy in Working Life (759/2004) was presented to the Finnish parliament in July and is expected to be approved in the autumn of 2018. The main purpose of the proposal is to ensure that Finnish legislation is compliant with the General Data Protection Regulation (EU 2016/679) and, to the extent possible, to maintain the present legislation regarding employees' privacy rights in working life. It also proposes minor changes regarding employers' duties relative to the collection of employees' personal data, the processing of health-related information, and camera surveillance.

Law No. 2018-727 of August 10, 2018, ("Essoc" law, for a State in the service of a society of trust) allows companies to correct a mistake without penalty, provided it is the first involuntary mistake. The law also increases the fines by 50% for breaches and creates a "right to be controlled," which allows a company or an individual to ask to be controlled by an administrative body. The result of the control will then bind the administration until circumstances change or until a new control gives different results. The law also provides other measures to increase legal security.

New Legislation Enacted

Author: Guillaume Desmoulin, Partner — Fromont Briens, Littler Global France

The Law for Freedom to Choose One's Professional Future, which was enacted in September 2018, covers secondment of employees. Under the law, these employees must work out of national territory. Law No. 2018-703 of August 3, 2018, requires companies employing at least 50 workers to publish an annual report on any salary gap between men and women and take actions to remove the gap. If the results are below the threshold, the company shall take corrective measures, either unilaterally or through collective negotiation. After a three-year implementation window, companies in violation may be subject to financial penalty. The law also reinforces penalties for sexual harassment, which is now defined as including sentiments and behaviors with a sexual or sexist nature, and requires employers to inform employees about the law.

Every Stipulation of a Contract on Studying Must Be Concluded in Writing

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Zoltán Csernus, Attorney — VJT & Partners Law Firm

According to the Hungarian Labour Act, the contract on studying must be in writing. Thus the employee is not entitled for more financial support than agreed in the learning contract. Here, the employer and the employee concluded a contract on studying, but failed to stipulate whether the monthly financial support should be a gross or a net amount. Based on a witness' testimony, the employee claimed that the amount must be considered as a net amount. The Hungarian Supreme Court ruled that without written contractual provisions the amount may not be considered – based only on witnesses' testimony – as a net amount.

Employer's Obligation to Provide Adequate Working Conditions

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Zoltán Csernus, Attorney — VJT & Partners Law Firm

The Hungarian Supreme Court declared that if the employee fails to fulfill his working obligations as a result of the employer's failure to provide adequate working conditions, the termination with immediate effect based on the employee's behavior is invalid. Here, the employee substituted his colleague within short periods of time in 14 different city districts without adequate information and knowledge about the city districts. Due to three minor administrative breaches, the employee was terminated with immediate effect. Since the breaches resulted from the frequent changes to the employee's obligations and the employer's failure to provide adequate working conditions, the Court declared that the termination is invalid.

Author: Zoltán Csernus, Attorney — VJT & Partners Law Firm

The definition of the "employer's control" covers all objective facts and circumstances which may be influenced by the employer. When evaluating this, the direct cause of the accident must be examined and the working methods leading to the accident, such as the choice of working method, the work equipment provided to the employees, the number and the skill of the employees, since such things must be provided by the employer and the employer has influence on them.

On September 10, 2018, the Ministry of Health and Family Welfare issued notification of the HIV Act, which aims to prevent discrimination against a "protected person," defined as an individual who (a) is HIV positive, or (b) is living or has lived, resided, or cohabited with a person who is HIV-positive. The Act prohibits discrimination and/or unfair treatment of such protected persons on various grounds, including matter of employment or occupation; healthcare services; education; the right to reside, purchase, rent, or otherwise occupy, any property; and opportunity to stand for, or, hold public or private office. Every establishment that maintains HIV-related records of a 'protected person' must adopt data protection measures to ensure confidentiality of information.

Supreme Court of India Decriminalizes Homosexuality

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Manishi Pathak, Partner — Cyril Amarchand Mangaldas

On September 6, 2018, in a landmark ruling, the Supreme Court of India decriminalized homosexuality. In Navtej Singh Johar & Ors., v. Union of India, the Court held that Section 377 of the Indian Penal Code that criminalized homosexual relationships between LGBT persons was archaic and arbitrary, finding that the criminalization of private, consensual sexual acts between adults (i.e., persons above the age of 18 years who are competent to consent) is violative of Articles 14, 15, 19, and 21 of the Constitution of India. The Court also clarified that consent must be free, which is completely voluntary in nature, devoid of any duress and coercion.

Employers Caution: Out-of-Hours Emails and the 48-Hour Working Week

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Loughlin Deegan, Partner — BryneWallace

The Irish Labour Court case of Kepak v. Gráinne O'Hara recently illustrated the risk for an employer when its employee is found to have worked excessive hours. In Ireland, subject to certain prescribed exceptions, an employer is in breach of the Organisation of Working Time Act 1997 if it permits its employee to work more than an average of 48 hours per week. The employee in this case was awarded €7,500 in respect of such a breach because (among other factors) the employee was found to have regularly replied to work-related emails late at night.

Case Law Demonstrates the Importance of Employee Data Protection Policies and IT/Acceptable Usage Policies in Defending Unfair Dismissal Claims

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Stephen Kane, Solicitor & Elaine Kelly, Partner — BryneWallace

A recent decision of the Irish Workplace Relations Commission and a decision of the Irish Labour Court highlight the benefit to an employer of having an Employee Data Protection Policy and an IT/Acceptable Usage Policy. In both cases, dismissal for breach of company data protection and IT-related policies was found to be fair. In one case, the complainant was dismissed for having kept a logbook containing highly sensitive personal data of patients. In another case, the employee was dismissed for possession of highly confidential company data, including commercially sensitive financial information and guest personal data.

Recommended Changes to Whistleblowing Legislation

Important Action by Regulatory Agency

Author: Emmet Whelan, Partner — BryneWallace

The Irish Department of Public Expenditure and Reform recently published a report on its statutory review of the Protected Disclosures Act 2014 (Irish whistleblowing legislation). The report suggests a number of changes to whistleblowing legislation, including enlarging the list of prescribed persons (appropriate persons to receive disclosures) and providing guidance to improve the consistency of reporting by public bodies. The report also notes that an amendment to the 2014 Act is likely to be required in due course to transpose an EU Directive on whistleblowing, once the negotiation process has been completed.

Author: Carlo Majer, Partner — Littler, Italy

On September 10, 2018, the Supreme Court held as unfair the dismissal of an employee who used vulgar language against the company administrator in a private chat with a trade union organization. The Court reasoned that, since only members of the trade unions participated in the chat, the chat was completely private and protected under the principle of freedom of criticism. Also, the language, even if vulgar, is part of a common way of speaking. The employer was ordered to reinstate the employee and pay 12 months of salary as damages.

New Method to Calculate Overtime

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Mónica Schiaffino, Partner — Littler Mexico, S.C.

Mexico's Second Chamber of the Supreme Court recently decided that, to calculate the weekly overtime pay, minutes worked exceeding the regular work day must be counted cumulatively for the entire workweek and paid in full hour units. "Surplus" minutes do not constitute time worked beyond the regular work shift and may be considered as the time employees use to start the work day or to leave the workplace. Under this new method, any time period exceeding the legal work day must be considered as overtime and added to complete hours.

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Benjamin Gaw, Director & Elizabeth Tong, Director — Drew & Napier LLC

The High Court of Singapore recently clarified the definition of “executive” as applied under the Employment Act (EA), holding that the mere fact that the employee had a supervisory role was not sufficient to make him an “executive”. Whether an employee is employed in a managerial or executive position is a factor in determining the applicability and scope of coverage of the EA, and the nature of the work and all circumstances, including the level of supervisory powers, should be taken into account.

CJEU Ruling Will Change Current Spanish Doctrine on Conventional Subrogations

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Juan Bonilla, Partner — Cuatrecasas

To date, the Spanish Supreme Court (SC) has placed conventional subrogation in labor-intensive sectors outside the scope of TUPE regulations. In a July 11, 2018 decision, the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) ruled that, although an agreement establishes subrogation, when the transfer of all or an essential part of the workforce alone comprises an “economic unit” subject to the transfer to which the Directive 2001/23 refers, the assumption of fact falls within the scope of application. The CJEU decision lays the groundwork for the SC to amend its case law on the subject.

The company then cancelled the interview and the recruitment process based on its policy that all employees should be able to greet with a handshake. On August 15, 2018, the Labor Court ruled that the company was liable for damages because the policy was not appropriate, necessary, and proportionate to achieve legitimate objectives, and unlawfully discriminated against women who, based on their religious belief, do not shake hands with men.

Supreme Court Clarifies Right to Continued Payment of Wages Pending Trials

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Eric van Dam, Partner — CLINT, Littler Global The Netherlands

On July 13, 2018, the Supreme Court of the Netherlands ruled that an employer has no obligation to pay wages between the period after a dismissal for urgent cause is voided and the moment the appellate court overrules that decision. After a dismissal for urgent cause is declared void, the employment contract can be reinstated upon the employee's request, and the obligation to pay wages revivifies until the legal end of the employment contract. With this ruling in hand, the employer can deny the employee his right to payment of wages if the employment contract ended only after appeal.

Supreme Court Rules Partial Termination Equals Partial Transition Payment

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Author: Wouter Engelsman, Partner — CLINT, Littler Global The Netherlands

On September 14, 2018, the Supreme Court of the Netherlands held that employers who convert an employee's full-time position into a part-time position must pay a transition fee for the hours the employee will no longer work since employment contracts can be terminated only as a whole. However, if special circumstances lead to a substantial and structural decrease in working hours, partial dismissal coupled with partial transition payment should be possible so the employee will not miss out on part of the transition payment if the employment contract eventually is terminated (in full) at a later date.

Because a large part of the Dutch government bodies have not yet fully complied with the GDPR, the DPA has given them time to fix any shortcomings. While the same goes for the private sector, the DPA indicated that after given time, non-compliance will result in an incremental penalty or high fines.

On July 30, 2018, the UK Supreme Court ruled that disclosure of a rape acquittal by police in an enhanced criminal record check did not breach the right to privacy under the European Convention of Human Rights. AR, who had been charged with rape, but later acquitted by a jury, alleged that police's disclosure of this acquittal prevented him from obtaining employment. Enhanced criminal record checks are required to work with vulnerable populations and may include unproven allegations if police are satisfied they are "relevant" and "ought to be included". The Supreme Court found this did not breach AR's right to privacy.

Sixth Circuit Rejects Argument that Full-Time Job Requires Full-Time Hours in ADA Case

Precedential Decision by Judiciary or Regulatory Agency

Authors: Michael Chichester, Shareholder & Jaclyn Giffen, Associate — Littler Mendelson, P.C.

On July 17, 2018, in a failure to accommodate case, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit held that full-time presence at the workplace is not always an essential job function. The decision in Hostettler v. College of Wooster undermines the deference often afforded to employers in determining whether a particular function is an "essential" job function. Moreover, it appears to eliminate—at least within the Sixth Circuit—the argument that an accommodation permitting an employee to work less than full-time hours in a full-time position is per se unreasonable.
